

Only team from the Gulf region

AUK delegates attend Harvard National MUN in Boston

KUWAIT CITY, April 7: The Harvard National Model United Nations (HNMUN) is a student based association that is affiliated with intergovernmental organizations such as the United Nations and its agencies. Each February participants from around the world meet in Boston, Massachusetts, to take part in a 3-day conference. This year, a team of six students from the American University of Kuwait (AUK) travelled to the United States to take part in the 61st annual event, where they came together with the 3,000+ students from 68 countries to participate, and the only team from the Gulf region.

AUK's MUN team is composed of Yasmine Abdulwahid, Mohammed Al-Saeed, Nourah Al-Sulaiman, Rolf Braathu, Ali Kelkawi and Paola Sedas, with Dr Gholam R. Vatandoust, Associate Professor History, as their Faculty Advisor. Attending HNMUN provided the AUK students with an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the rules of parliamentary procedures, such as making procedural and substantive motions, writing and presenting resolutions and working within the norms of international diplomacy; it gave them the opportunity to measure themselves internationally against the world's best and the brightest.

Preparation

Yasmine is the Vice-President of the AUK chapter of the Model United Nations. She said that she felt grateful for the support AUK has provided the team with in preparation for the trip. "I'm also very proud of my delegates who came along and provided their time and effort to represent our country and our university," she added. Her teammates expressed similar sentiments. Paola Sedas, one of AUK's international students commented that

AUK delegates with Dr Gholam R. Vatandoust

"on the whole, it was an experience I do not regret, in spite of the snow storm, and I would encourage all young debaters to attend international conferences to get a real life exposure of what a career in Politics or International Relations would be like."

At HNMUN, the AUK team represented Poland. Yasmine Abdulwahid,

Vice-President of MUNAUK, and fellow student Rolf Braathu, assumed the roles of committee members of the World Health Organization. Paola Sedas and Nourah Al-Sulaiman were part of the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee of the General Assembly, while Ali Kelkawi and Mohammed Al-Saeed were members of the Futuristic Commission on Space Development under the Economic and Social Council. Professor Gholamreza R. Vatandoust of the International Relations department served as the academic advisor for the team.

That was not the first time the team participated in an international MUN conference. In November 2014, a team of 13 students travelled to Bahrain to participate in the Bahrain Universities MUN conference with Dana Taqi, Senior Coordinator for Alumni Affairs, as advisor. The conference took place in the Sheraton Hotel, Manama, and was open to participants from universities within the GCC.

Ali Kelkawi, the current transitional Student Council Vice President at AUK, was part of the Economic and Social Council representing Canada. His commission sponsored a resolution on the prevention of Juvenile Delinquency and Agricultural Development and Food Security. Ali received an honorable mention for his performance and debating the resolution on Juvenile Delinquency.

Nourah Al-Sulaiman participated in the General Assembly representing Indonesia. She was a co-submitter of a resolution that was finally approved, and won a Diplomacy Award for her work. Rolf H. Braathu, also represented Indonesia, but in the International Atomic Energy Agency, focused on the peaceful use of nuclear power. He also won a Diplomacy Award for his engagement in drafting a resolution that was approved.

"The major problem facing most universities is funding, particularly from economically pressed countries," said Dr. Vatandoust. "Limited numbers of scholarships are available for individuals and delegates. By bringing students together from across the world and having them engage in the art of negotiations and diplomacy, the real goal is to help build human capital for the future of the international community."

Model UN is a long standing tradition for many universities where credit hours are granted for preparation and competition at the annual events. MUNAUK is registered as a student club. Over the past 5 years, the club has been funded and endorsed by the Office of Student Life and supported by the International Relations Department which, according to Dr Vatandoust, aims to support MUNAUK both financially and academically in order to prepare the team for future competitions.

The American University of Kuwait (AUK) is an independent, private, equal opportunity, and co-educational liberal arts institution of higher education. Visual Arts students of AIS visit CAP

The Visual Arts students of the American International School Kuwait (AIS), grades nine to twelve, visited Contemporary Art Platform (CAP) in Shuwaikh to view the retrospective exhibition of Sami Mohamed and meet the artist. For the students — some of whom had never entered an art gallery before — this was an unprecedented opportunity to see internationally acclaimed artwork and meet Kuwait's preeminent realist sculptor. The show includes over 120 bronze, marble and alabaster sculptures, drawings, installations and other work. The extraordinarily conceptual curation of the exhibition is the handiwork of Abed Al Kadiri, CAP's director. Along with Alia Um Saif, CAP's program director, Sami Mohamed provided the students with a personal guided tour of his life, his work and his artistic philosophy. This is only one of several art field trips AIS students have taken this year to Kuwait's museums, galleries and cultural landmarks, led by art teachers Mrs Angie Hani and Bryn Barnard, to infuse classroom instruction with real-world experience. The American International School offers the International Baccalaureate, which prepares students for acceptance at the world's top English-language universities. Graduates of the IB visual art program have gone on to earn top positions in the art, film and fashion worlds. AIS is located in Medan Hawally.

Faculty of Science Guidance Program holds Microbiology Art Competition

This year, for the first time, the Microbiology Program (Dept of Biological Sciences Faculty of Science Kuwait University) incorporated an art competition in their annual exhibition which displays numerous beneficial roles of microorganisms in nature as well as industry. Microbiology-related pencil drawings and bacterial culture artwork produced by undergraduate students from the department were displayed and judged by 8 microbiology staff members. The 2014-2015 microbiology student advisor (Dr D. Al-Gharabally) stated that she would formally like to thank all the participants of this competition and added that many students as well as staff members showed interest in the microbiology artwork. Therefore, she hopes that the Faculty of Science can organize an annual art exhibition in which students from each department can participate and display artwork related to their scientific major. Pure cultures of different coloured bacteria were used to draw on nutrient agar plates. The colours of the different bacteria chosen developed within 24 hours as the bacterial cells divided and formed visible colonies. Below are examples of bacterial culture artwork produced by students and research assistants with varying levels of microbiology experience.
